Summary
	<ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Consider how nation, state, and supranational organization are related. Are nations like Scotland more likely to remain within their states and not vote for independence because they are also part of a supranational organization (in the case of Scotland, the European Union – for now)? Will the growth of supranational organizations lead to a decline in nations calling for statehood or will shifting more decision making from the state to the supranational organization actually increase the call for independence of nations within states? Explain.</li></ul>
